

Give nutty, salty cheese quesadillas balance with the bitter notes of kale and radicchio.

Trends

- South American food continues to gain popularity, especially the cuisines of Peru and Brazil. Today's diners want adventure and unique experiences, so south of the border is fast becoming south of the equator. Produce- and seafood-centric, chefs in these countries focus on flavors like bright citruses, floral peppers, and hearty potatoes.
- Tamales have made a comeback in both the traditional (cheese, pork, roasted chile, and pineapple), but also new, adventurous recipes like green corn, pumpkin mole, and sweet strawberry.
- Octopus and ceviche are exploding on appetizer menus—especially when paired with garlic, onions, and fresh herbs.
- Homemade everything! Customers want to see the person making the tortillas, watch guacamole mixed tableside, and see Caesar salads tossed (yes, these were invented in Tijuana!)
- The gluten-free trend shows no signs of abating, so it's lucky that many Hispanic-style dishes are naturally gluten-free. Be sure to have plenty of corn tortillas (instead of flour) and ground maize for tamales and fish taco batter to meet the needs of customers pursuing this diet.

Suggested Pairings

- Markon First Crop (MFC) Potatoes: A staple in many Spanish dishes, potatoes also find their way into recipes from Mexico, Peru, and Puerto Rico. Pair them with bell peppers, cream, eggs, paprika, and tomatoes.
- Ready-Set-Serve (RSS) Lime Juice: This juice balances spicy or heavy flavors like chile peppers, cheese, corn, and pork.
- RSS Bunched Cilantro: The predominant herb used in Mexican cooking, cilantro gives recipes a citrusy, fresh flavor. Use it with avocados, onions, refried beans, rice, and shrimp.
- RSS Pure Pulp: Pre-peeled and mashed, takes the work out of making guacamole and other avocado-based recipes. Use with crab, lemons, tomatillos, and tortilla chips.
- RSS Long Top Green Onions: Mildly zesty, green onions mellow when cooked—try them with black beans, eggs, poultry, and Romesco sauce.
- RSS Orange Sections: Refreshing oranges are a great winter beverage and dessert option. They are also ideal with custard, olives, sausage, and seafood.
